History

At the beginning of the Era, Sola was a mere human player named Somber_Night. During Session 1 she joined a group of players to the southeast of spawn and began building ties of friendship with them as they struggled to survive the first few nights. Once they had established themselves and bonds of trust were created, she revealed to them that she was, in fact, the Goddess of Light, fallen from the sight of the other gods and relegated to human form but destined to regain her rightful place. This proclamation was initially viewed with suspicion by the other members of the group, but they came around to the idea and soon supported the idea of her re-ascension to godhood. She helped establish contact with nearby civilizations, including the "Wind and Waves" civilization to their south. There she found a supporter in Callie, Goddess of the Air, though encounters with the gods of Fire and Void were not as promising. As Sola's group (by this point known as "Daybreak") didn't have enough members to completely provide for themselves, she persuaded them to join the Wind people and grow her following there.

In Session 4, Daybreak abandoned their floating tower and formally joined the settlement of the Wind people. A shrine to Sola was hastily established on a nearby hillside overlooking a river, and a group assembled to attempt the ritual that would re-establish the god of Light. Though this ritual did not appear to be successful at first, it did confirm the others' ability to pray to Sola's human moniker (Somber_Night), and the process of building up a proper following – not just by word of mouth, but by deed – began.
